

I understand that FCC is planning to remove even more limits on the number of media outlets a single entity can hold. I am very opposed to this. The current media "owners" (who, after all, are supposed to be operating in the public interest) offer little but homogenized programming with limited or non-existent local input and a miniscule range of viewpoint. Rather than loosen the restrictions on how many media outlets an owner may have in any area, I would prefer the FCC to return to tighter limits, in hope that more media sources with a wider range of viewpoints would be encouraged.
